Requirement to comply with lending covenant temporarily suspended

Heartland Bank has agreed on Friday, 16 September 2016 to temporarily suspend the requirement for SeaDragon to comply with its lending covenant (relating to the ratio of working capital to debt) for the financial quarter ending 30 September 2016. The suspension of that requirement was sought in order to allow SeaDragon to extend the rights offer to after the financial quarter end at 30 September 2016. This was because, without that suspension, if the rights offer had been extended, the company may potentially be in breach of that lending covenant (relating to the ratio of working capital to debt) as of 30 September 2016.
